

Strong limits on media ownership and cross-ownership are indispensable to democracy. These limits are already far too lax, with media corporations like Clear Channel having too much power to determine and homogenize political, cultural, and artistic content. What is left of democracy in America will only be further damaged, or even destroyed, by further relaxation of media ownership rules. Is the FCC for saving democracy OR for handing more control of America to giant media corporations?